

The Life of Violet (Read) Sutherland (1896-1984)

A succinct abstract of our mothers life, would be to say that she was raped at seventeen (1914), a fact which only came to light for me when I realized that my Aunt Sylvia, was, in fact, my half sister. The rest of Violets history after the birth of her daughter, Sylvia, during the bombardment of Hartlepool (16th December 1914), is coming to grips with that, and how she fought to recover and get on with the rest of her life, which she did, eventually seeing her own family re-united, though in difficult times. It is a testament to her determination and her strength of character. It was a tough battle, considering the society of the day and the narrow-mindedness of her family, but she was able to rise above it all. It is a story of too many young women caught up in a similar plight, but not so much today. Violet Read, was born on the 7th September 1896, in Brands Terrace (now demolished) of Warrenby, Redcar, Tees-side, England. She was the eldest daughter in a family of seven. She died in January 1984 in Lower Hutt, Wellington, NZ. Her father was James Read, of Witton, Norfolk, and her mother was Harriet Maria Ward, of Acle, Norfolk, who became Read, upon her marriage. They and their family, are in the UK census data of 1911, when they resided in Redcar. At that time James Read shows up as disabled, after an industrial accident about 1905.
