

One Hundred and Four Horses: A Memoir of Farm and Family, Africa and Exile

Pat and Mandy Retzlaff enjoyed a hard but satisfying farming life in Zimbabwe. After their children, the couples true pride and joy were their horses. But in early 2001, their lives were thrown into turmoil when armed members of President Robert Mugabes War Veterans Association began violently reclaiming farmlands owned by white Zimbabweans. Under the threat of death, they were forced to flee. As families across the country abandoned their land, they left behind dozens of horses. Devoted animal lovers, Pat and Mandy virtually homeless themselves vowed to save these beautiful animals, risking their lives to bring them to safety: Shere Khan, the queen of the herd; Tequila, the escape artist forever trying to walk back to his original home; Grey, the silver gelding and leader; Princess, the temperamental mare; and the numerous others they rescued along the way. One Hundred and Four Horses recounts their unforgettable journey and the remarkable horses they protected. It is a love story and an epic tale of survival and unbreakable bonds those that hold us to land and family, but also those between man and the most majestic of animals, the horse.
